

Dating: Expectations Vs. Reality

When it comes to relationships and dating, reality can often be disappointing. You may have come across memes depicting the differences between what we expect and what really happens while dating. Well, sorry to burst your bubble, but mostly they are true.

Quite frequently, people talk about “relationship goals” in various contexts like marriage and online dating. At times, these certain “goals” becomes our yard sticks that we need to hit at all costs, or we’re doing something wrong.

No matter how many relationship quotes you post or love guides you read, real-life dating is extremely different than how it is portrayed on Instagram or in movies.

So without further ado, let's quickly take a look at a few observations and pieces of advice that could help you demonstrate the contrast between dating realities and expectations!

It Could Be Costly

If you're a big romantic and desire to experience all the things you read or see on social media and movies, you need to remember that all these shenanigans cost A LOT of money.

Playing mini golf, buying expensive champagne and dinner, and going to the movies – all require breaking the bank!

There Will Be Dull Moments

Humans are complicated living things. We have a plethora of behaviors and emotions – some that we sometimes fail to comprehend ourselves.

So it mustn't be a shock when we discover that our "better half" doesn't always react the way we expect. That goes for both bad and good.

It Is Not Always Perfect

In today's modern era, there is a big concept out there that relationships need to be absolutely perfect, with no flaws whatsoever! Like, every single day must be just how we want it to be.

Every experience, every scenario, every day – perfection and nothing else. However, this couldn't be further from the truth.

